Abstract
Most imaging modalities provide volumetric and morphological information on tumors and tumor response to treatment. However, these changes manifest several days-weeks to manifest. Molecular/physiological changes in tumors appear within a day or two after treatment initiation in responding tumors. Such techniques will be valuable in drug discovery research and potentially for human use. Examples of such techniques with introduction to concepts and applications to preclinical and clinical research will be discussed.

Keywords: